

Hybrid & Online Teaching Institute for Faculty

To prepare Columbia faculty for the Fall 2020 semester, the Center for Teaching and Learning (CTL) has developed and released the Hybrid & Online Teaching Institute: a new online offering that guides faculty through adapting their courses to online, hybrid, or face-to-face formats. The institute consists of asynchronous, on-demand content hosted in CourseWorks followed by a synchronous online experience with CTL staff and other faculty participants. Together, these sections provide faculty with a comprehensive toolkit they can apply to their own course context whether this may be a seminar, small lecture, or large lecture class.

The asynchronous portion is available as five modules which faculty complete beforehand on their own time. Modules contain a variety of content in text and video formats, practical strategies, and resources. The subsequent live portion over Zoom is an opportunity for faculty to ask questions, share ideas with one another and CTL staff, and strategize for their courses.

Asynchronous Module Topics	Live, synchronous session
(1) Adapting Your Face-to-Face Class for Online: First Steps	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Discuss asynchronous content and share ideas and strategies with colleagues • Experience assessment tools • Engage with a mini-case study based on Spring 2020 student feedback • Discuss applying strategies to different class formats
(2) Welcoming Students to Online Learning and Creating Community
(3) Engaging Students in Active and Collaborative Learning Online
(4) Assessing Student Learning Online
(5) HyFlex Essentials	